

How The Love Story That Had No End Gave Birth to the Ring That Could Last Forever

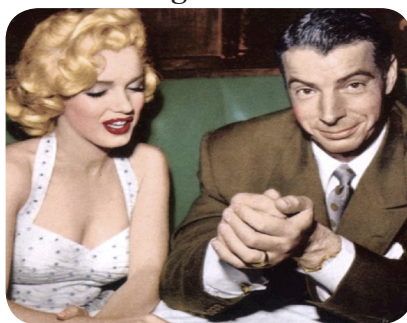

It was a love story that had no rival. The gorgeous Hollywood actress and the New York Yankees superstar. On January 14, 1954, Joe DiMaggio presented Marilyn Monroe with a ring layered in 35 emerald cut baguettes to encircle her finger. That day, her engagement ring became her wedding band as they married in a civil ceremony. Although it lasted less than a year, their marriage was one for the storybooks. Some say the romance burned so hot that it extinguished itself, that their personalities were too strong to be joined in marriage.

Throughout their lives, Joe and Marilyn would forever remain best friends. After Marilyn's death, Joe found an unfinished letter from her that trailed off, "Your happiness means my happiness, and..." Joe was so dedicated to her that he sent flowers to her grave twice a week for 20 years. In fact, Joe DiMaggio's last words were, "I'll finally get to see Marilyn."

Six decades later, we still are in awe of the undying romance that Joe and Marilyn shared. Their love story is one of romantic legend. Today, we celebrate that special bond that binds two people for life with the Lasting Love Eternity Band.
